Searching and Browsing the New Yorker Online

Find your magazine by going to the E-Journals list

- On the library home page, click on the E-journals link in the Find it section.

- Enter the name of the journal and click on "Search."

- Click on the link to Academic Search Premier
- This will take you to the journal contents page

Note: The journal may be available from a number of different online sources. Check the coverage dates on the left to see which source covers what years.
From here, you have 2 options:

1. Search within this publication
2. Browse the table of contents

Search within this Publication

Click on Search within this publication on the left side of the screen.

Type your search term in the search box.

This will restrict your search results to just articles on this topic in this publication.

Click on the title of the article to see the full article.
Browse the Table of Contents

If you want to browse the table of contents of a specific issue, select a volume listed on the side. Click on the + sign to expand the year. Then choose the issue.

Now you can browse through the table of contents for that volume and issue.
