Adding already written citation styles script

This screencast will cover how to add additional citation styles to the basic 16 styles that come pre-loaded with Zotero. Many times disciplines or journals have citation styles that differ from the most commonly used citation styles that are initially installed with Zotero. To add more citation styles, go to the Actions button on your Zotero toolbar. Choose preferences from the menu, then choose the “Cite” tab. Within the Cite tab, choose the “styles” tab. This tab shows you the styles you currently have installed. The main way to get more styles is to click on the “get additional styles” link. This link opens a website listing the 1600 styles Zotero has available. You can search for the style you like in a variety of ways – by directly searching for the name of a style you want; by searching for the format the style is written in, for example, author-date format; or by disciplinary field. For this example, I will search for the Journal of Biotechnology. Before loading this style, I can doublecheck to see if this is the style I had in mind by hovering over the title. This shows me examples of books, articles and more cited in this style. To install this style, simply click the “install” link. If you open up a Word document and choose “set doc prefs” you will now see that this style is available for you to write with. To learn more about finding styles, particularly when the title of the style you want is not in the list, visit the “I can’t find my citation style” module.
