The contrast between the power which the people have in their government and the power which the government has over them is so great that there is a difference in their political systems. The government is represented in Congress, and has its own branches, including the President, the Vice-President, and the Cabinet. The people are represented by their elected representatives in Congress, and have no control over the actions of government or property, and therefore no say in the decisions that affect them.

The result of this is that the government is free to act in its own interests, and the people are left to suffer the consequences. The government can do whatever it wants, without regard for the wishes of the people, and the people have no say in the matter. The result is that the government becomes more powerful, and the people become more powerless.

There are several reasons for this. First, the government has more resources than the people, and can therefore afford to do more. Second, the government has more access to information, and can therefore make better decisions. Third, the government has more power, and can therefore impose its will on the people. And finally, the government has more control over the people, and can therefore prevent them from acting against its interests.

The result is that the government becomes more powerful, and the people become more powerless. The government can do whatever it wants, without regard for the wishes of the people, and the people have no say in the matter. The government becomes more powerful, and the people become more powerless.